Players can also view the data collected in the camera views of the game. When they view this information in-game, a unique player identity will be awarded and a “player heat map” will provide an indication of a player’s activity. The top 50 players on FIFA Points – across all football codes and men’s, women’s and sevens rugby – are displayed in real-time. The top 50 players can also be viewed on the “FIFA Player Rank” page. Additionally, “Intelligent Player” technology gives players an indication of how they fare in comparison to their opponent based on a number of factors, including high speed, acceleration, stoppage time, run frequency and distance covered. When reviewing match information, fans can also earn “FIFA Points” by submitting match highlights. Players will also be awarded “FIFA Points” by simulating key performance indicators in training or through the completion of a FIFA Skill Rating test. Real-world player characteristics are also now featured throughout the game via the “FIFA Showcase.” Any player can be automatically added to the interactive “FIFA Showcase” by submitting high quality match highlights. Also included within the “Showcase” are interactive features such as the ability to control how the ball reacts and perform actions for players. Finally, “The Journey” mode, which features career progression, is now integrated into the overall “FIFA 22” story. This mode displays player development and coaching milestones throughout players’ careers, placing the spotlight on the player’s overall position within the squad structure. The player’s match performance throughout the season is also monitored and reflected on the player’s overall ranking and the coach’s overall FIFA Team Performance. All these changes and enhancements are now available on PlayStation 4, Xbox One, PC and Wii U. More information regarding these and other enhancements can be found on FIFA.com. Since its debut in 2002, the FIFA franchise has gone through many changes, and continues to be developed for numerous platforms around the world by EA Canada and the EA Mobile team. 2019 FIFA Womens World Cup Tournament Content Overview Gameplay In FIFA, the player has two teams to control: a squad of professionals and a squad of amateur players. The former are chosen by the player and can be any nationality, and they are developed over the course of the season. All players wear a replica of an actual football shirt for the real-life version of the game. The latter are created by the player during the creation of the game, and are only used for practice matches and a weekly league. Each team contains two formations to select: attacking formations, and defensive formations, and at the end of each game, the team with the most points is deemed to have won. The current competitive FIFA seasons end in October, and the world champion is crowned after that. FIFA uses many unique features, including a 3D match engine, a transfer market, and individual player personalities. The game is controlled by on-screen buttons and analog sticks, with the six different buttons used to control actions at the ball, attacks, crosses, the pass, shots, and goal shots. In single player games, you must select a manager, and use their team to face other managers' teams in a number of game types, including tournaments, cup competitions, knockout tournaments, and league and cup matches. FIFA integrates social aspects through the Clubs and Friends feature. In it, players create a profile and can upload videos of themselves to share, as well as access other players' clubs, and view their clubs' profiles. Friends can be added through social media, and communication tools such as friend requests, statuses, and private messages are made available.
